National Panhellenic Conference Recognizes Top College Associations

Awards Recognize Sorority Leadership Groups at 43 Universities and Colleges

INDIANAPOLIS — The National Panhellenic Conference (NPC), one of the largest advocacy organizations for women, is recognizing College Panhellenic Associations at 43 colleges and universities.

College Panhellenics, which are cooperatives comprised of all sororities on a campus, are scored on seven criteria, including those of value to college campuses such as academics, programming and community relations.

NPC has recognized student-managed College Panhellenics with awards of excellence and achievement for more than 50 years. With organizations located at more than 672 U.S. and Canadian colleges and universities, only the top scoring groups are recognized with this honor for either excellence or achievement.

“NPC is excited to recognize the outstanding efforts of undergraduate sorority women who are working together,” said Julie Johnson, Panhellenics chairman. “These awards are given to those who are following the standards of excellence set for College Panhellenic Associations.”
